“Missile Base in Turkey” Scored Negotiation

Overview

This is a scored negotiation exercise intended for law students and professionals. The underlying scenario involves the negotiation of a possible American missile base in Turkey. The student negotiators receive points depending on which specific provisions are included in the final deal. A confidential “points grid” is provided to each side with a list of the points available for each potential agreement term. The simulation is designed for use in one class session. The in-class time for the exercise is approximately two hours. See Instructor Notes & Background for more details.
